Rural Areas Development Program

1. OBJECTIVE.

Underemployment in rural America is a serious problem. More than 35% of the farm families had incomes under $2000 in 1959. The full resources of the Department of Agriculture must be directed toward the elimination of this serious low income underemployment problem. State and local authorities throughout the nation are aware of this situation and are attempting to stimulate economic growth and income opportunities in areas of underemployment. Rural Areas Development Program

1. THE PROBLEM. Underemployment, imbalance in land use, inadequate levels of natural resource development and conservation and consequent low income of farm families and other residents and unwise wastage of natural resources in rural America are serious problems. More than 75 percent of all farm families had incomes under $5,000 in 1959. The growing national population needs and demands additional land for recreation, industrial, commercial, residential and other uses, while some rural land is being used for the production of commodities that cannot and will not be appropriately used. State and local public authorities and private persons and organizations throughout the Nation are aware of this situation and are attempting to stimulate more rapid economic growth, new income opportunities, and a more nearly adequate level and balanced pattern of natural resource conservation, development and use.
2. POLICY. The full resources of the Department of Agriculture must be directed to provide maximum appropriate and effective service to local efforts toward the eventual elimination of the causes of adverse economic conditions. In this, agencies of the Department shall commit their resources toward the support of the state and local efforts. SECRETARY'S MEMORANDUM NO. 1448, REVISED

Rural Areas Development Program

1. THE PROBLEM. Underemployment, imbalance in land use, inadequate levels of natural resource development and conservation and consequent low income of farm families and other residents and unwise wastage of natural resources in rural America are serious problems. More than 75 percent of all farm families had incomes under $5,000 in 1959. The growing national population needs and demands additional land for recreation, industrial, commercial, residential and other uses, while some rural land is being used for the production of commodities that cannot and will not be appropriately used. Annual drain of the Nation's renewable agricultural natural resources still exceeds annual renewal. State and local public authorities and private persons and organizations throughout the Nation are aware of this situation and are attempting to stimulate more rapid economic growth, new income opportunities, and a more nearly adequate level and balanced pattern of natural resource conservation, development and use.
2. POLICY. The full resources of the Department of Agriculture shall be directed through the Rural Areas Development Program to provide maximum appropriate and effective service to local efforts toward the eventual elimination of the problems indicated above. The Department expects, through the means established in this Memorandum, to assure needed assistance to local initiative, leadership and coordinated action in meeting these development needs of rural areas, in keeping with the broad responsibilities of the Department. Agencies of the Department shall commit their resources toward the support of the State and local efforts. Functions delegated to the Department under the Area Redevelopment Act (Public Law 87-27) shall be a part of the Rural Areas Development Program.
3. PROGRAM DIRECTION. The Chairman of the Rural Areas Development Board will give general direction and supervision to the Rural Areas Development Program including activities under the Area Redevelopment Act. Operating responsibility will be delegated to appropriate agencies in accordance with their general assignments of responsibility, as set forth in Title 1 of the Administrative Regulations.

MEMORANDUM NO. 1451

International Agricultural Economics Policy Committee

1. Departmental Committee. Economic problems in the area of U. S. agricultural export markets have become increasingly complex. Many of these problems are now receiving the attention of international organizations in whose work the Department of Agriculture participates in one way or another. To give direction and leadership to the handling of agricultural economic affairs affecting international organization activities, an International Agricultural Economics Policy Committee is hereby established with the following membership:

Dr. Willard W. Cochrane, Director, Agricultural Economics (Chairman)
Robert C. Tetro, Administrator, Foreign Agricultural Service
Horace D. Godfrey, Administrator, Commodity Stabilization Service
Oris V. Wells, Administrator, Agricultural Marketing Service

2. Coordinating Functions. The committee will concern itself with the position the Department should take with respect to economic policy questions arising in international organizations and with ensuring uniform approaches to problems arising in two or more international forums.

Agencies of the Department concerned with preparation of position papers and with briefing of delegations should refer to this committee any economic policy questions about which they are in doubt. Also, the committee will advise the U.S.--FAO Interagency Committee, as necessary, on agricultural economic policy questions arising in that interdepartmental body. The committee may make proposals to the U.S.--FAO Interagency Committee on the composition of delegations or portions of delegations to international meetings where economic policy questions will be discussed.

3. Cooperation of Subcommittees. The Chairman of the committee may, from time to time, designate sub-groups to assist with studies or in other ways as required to enable the committee to carry out its work. When it is necessary to organize subcommittees with representation for various agencies of the Department, I urge the highest level of cooperation in order to represent as effectively as possible the interests of American agriculture in the economic activities of the international organizations.
